

What would cause viscosity to decrease?

The most common reason for a decrease in viscosity in both industrial and mobile applications is lube mixing — adding a lower viscosity oil to a system that contains a higher viscosity oil. A decrease in viscosity may also be caused by fuel dilution, shearing of the viscosity index improver additives (see shearing below) and contamination from solvents or process chemicals.